

FRIENDSHIP

DISTILL'D amidst the gloom of night, Dark hangs the dewdrop on the thorn, Till notice'd by approaching light, It glitters in the facets of a crown.

Morn soon retires; her feeble pow'r The sun outcasts with genial day, And gently, in benign hour, Exhales the liquid pearl away.

Thus on affliction's false bed, Deep frowns rise of faded hue; Condensing round the mourner's head, They bathe the cheek with chilly dew.

The pity flows hot down from Heaven, When kind the pious affluence rains; To friendship's fun alone 'tis given To soothe and dry the mourner's tears.

From the COLUMBIAN CENTINEL, CHEAPER THAN CHEARI

The following is true copy of an advertisement which was lately found posted up in a Tavern in Warwick, Rhode-Island:

An Enemy to Great Salaries I HEREBY offer myself a Candidate for a Representative in Congress and will serve for two thirds of the wages and lodge one third in the Gen Treasury of the State or take what the Assembly shall think fit

STEPHEN ARNOLD

Since the "offer" of Mr. Arnold to serve as a Federal Representative, cheaper than the present pay, a correspondent has formed a scale of depreciation, which determines merit, and the value of public services, and finds that "Mr. Arnold's pay according to this scale, would be somewhat below the value of a cent per day."

LONDON

A Common fair, who lately returned from the East Indies, and unlike the generality of his countrymen, had saved a considerable sum of money out of his wages in order to avoid being imposed, took the resolution to remain a while on shore. In this view, he leased a sixteen foot box on Berkeley common, and erected thereon, a very small wooden house, just large enough to contain himself, and his wife Sue, and a very few articles of the most common furniture. A parcel of his countrymen, to play him a wagh trick, went one night last week with two long pieces of timber, and running them under the house, raised it, and carried it fairly off, leaving it near a mile from its former situation, the sailor and his wife, being all the while fast asleep, and knowing nothing of the matter. In the morning, the honest "opening" the door, and finding an entire change both of place and property, rubbing his eye, observed dryly in his rib, Devil take me, Sir, but we have been all night long dragging our anchors!
