My pupil, for his better accomplishment, will fikewise attend to the following remarks, and form himself upon the model of character which they define. I have been in company with fome good natured people, who have had an admirable way of faving, one the who have had an admirable way of faving one the trouble of proceeding in a floty, by undertaking to furnish the audience with the remainder of it, as foon as a person has made a beginning. Now this is true urbanity, and certainly proceeds from a desire of be-ing structure. I wish, however, that these kind folls would extend their goodness a little further, and let us know before hand, when they mean to affishe, as it might save one many an unruly blink and hard thought. I hope my popil may profit by these re-marks; but at the same time I advise him, by no mean, for traced, a little from any thing he advances in conmarks; but at the fame time I advise him, by no means, to retrad a little from any thing he advances in consertation. I remember to have heard of a general who acquired great reputation from never connermanding an order that he had one given, because, whenever a commanding officer does, this, his troops lofe all faith & confidence in him. It has this other advantage, that if he perfish in his argument, backs it with the force of frong user freations, and engroffes all the title, he necessfully prevents his antagonist from a possibility of replying—and until an argument is replied to, it always stands good. replying—and until an argument is replied to, it al ways flands good. He must despite punctuality, as beneath his dignity and although he pledges his word over and over aggs; and although he pledges his word over and over aggs; it is little, it is meanness to comply with it. Words were made for men, not men for words; jit is therefore inverting the laws of nature and of order, to be were made for men, not men for what; it is not fore inverting the laws of name and of order, to be fettered by a promife: And we not make others feel our confequence, if we ever mean to convince them that we are truly great; befides, it is noble to be free; and that be that voluntarily hackleft his mind, his body,

Hope it will not be unproductive of benefit sitsow when the liberty to lattod use my young pupil so a knowledge of the character, of Mr. Nincow Latrica Brahm, a per dealer in cent percent, who, it addition to a thorough space of surprising marks of great good breeding. He is distinguished a sure and impersions to an incery. His favourite topick of convertation is his own dear less and of orten delights and improves others by afforing them that he has such near incamacy and connection with all the great men is office, that repose so much unbounded confidence in him, and pay such a difference to his opinions and superious abilities, that a stranger would be led to think, that Congress dare not passed law, without previously consulting him. He speaks in raptures of his prefers high consequence and prospects of funne oppolence and grandent. Intompany, he monopolizes the whole convertation, unless some one proposition of the mighty would be suppress to force a word in, when he stops to take breath. It is really pleasing to hear him tell of the want terrible and marvellous cyclosite that he could perform, if he were so disposed and of the mighty would trule of mighty things which he has feen and sone speaks and finit to support the with fresh water on his head, he whose, and winter no goody cree ever law our, or water, and of before. Whenever his invention grows weary, and falls to fupport him with fresh water on his head, he postpones the further consideration of these subjects, until he has lettigre to manufacture a better affortment. polynones the further confideration of these subjects, until he has leifige to manufacture a better affortment. Mr. Little parties has another trait in his character equally charming with the reft. He is remarkably fond of displaying his centorial abilities; 3 and in this way often spends the whole force of his artillary in violent attacks of contempt & ridical cupton religious religious's votaries. This he does not not maderally minner, lawsys minicking the minicken of God, and exchaining eloquendly against the feriptures. It is not not different my symptoms of being tired with his perpetual clatter; fomething most be faid, and I verily believe he would foomer burth his lungs, than be silent for a moment, when he is in good give for troping; for he judges naturally enough, that as it is extremely agree subset to himself to run a min this way, it mas the equally entertaining to his hearters; besides which he is fully persuaded of the impossibility of his rearing any benefit from the observations of others because he knows more than all the would besides. These been told, but cannot wouch for the authenticity of the report, that cannot vouch for the subenticity of the report, that Mr. NINCUM LITTLEMEATHS, our well bred hero, means to wear a bifnop in future: For the haghty means to wear a biftop in fatures; For the highly and diddinafed manner, with which he team every body, has fometimes induced forely unpolithed fellows to report on him in a rather too rough & indelicate way. Nincum is therefore of the opinion that a history way. he an excellent defence to a tender part, against the rule and disgreceful attacks of ill-bred feet.
